

Jack Ryan
English 2XL
Section 4
PV Picture CM #2

Hidden Depths

This photo of an iceberg is one of the most important symbolic photos I know of. It depicts an entire iceberg, which is rare because most pictures of icebergs only capture the view of the ice above water, not accounting for the vast amounts of ice below the water level as well. This photo is a combination of multiple photos, and it is digitally rendered to create a complete photo that seems to be taken exactly at sea level, allowing the viewer to see the entire iceberg. There is much more ice below water than there is above water, however, and what may seem like a dinky little piece of ice at first is actually a huge iceberg that has the capability of taking down the Titanic.

This photo brings the classic message of not judging a book by its cover, and not underestimating anyone or anything because they just might be very large and very powerful. First impressions can very well be deceiving, so we must not judge something prematurely. Ever. The photo can apply to everyone, because everyone has something inside them, good or bad, that cannot be seen from first impressions. Sometimes, the best ideas ever, ideas that change the world, are buried deep within genius' souls, and we must be open to new ideas if we are ever to allow these ideas to be discovered and put into proper use.